

Future Accommodation Model (FAM) update: Information for all Service personnel

What is the FAM pilot?

A pilot is being developed to allow the MOD to test a new approach to accommodation - the Future Accommodation Model (FAM) - which aims to provide Service personnel and their families more choice over where they live and whom they live with. The pilot will allow MOD to test this new approach and understand how it affects Service personnel and their families. This feedback will inform a decision on whether or not to implement FAM across the UK in the future.

When will the pilot start?

The pilot was due to start in December 2018 but will now take place in 2019.

This allows more time to develop the pilot and ensure it is the most effective way to test the Future Accommodation Model. The pilot is expected to take place at a small number of military bases. We expect Ministers to confirm locations and start dates next year.

In the meantime, Service personnel should continue to utilise current accommodation policy (JSP 464) until further notice.

Further information will be provided well in advance of a pilot start date.
